

Culturally Responsive, Evidence-Based Practices for Engaging Communities of Color

(Part One of Two)

Presenter Information: Dr. Jonathan Martinez completed his Ph.D. in Clinical Psychology at UCLA. His research has been informed from his clinical experiences at Providence St. John's Health Center in L.A., where he primarily served Latinx, Spanish-speaking families in the delivery of evidence-based interventions. He completed a Postdoctoral Research Fellowship at the Child & Adolescent Services Research Center in San Diego, where he worked on projects focused on the implementation of evidenced-based practices in community mental health settings. His research focuses on achieving health equity by implementing evidence-based, culturally responsive care to ethnically diverse communities. Dr. Martinez is currently an Associate Professor in the Department of Psychology at CSUN, where he is the Co-Director of the Clinical Psychology M.A. Program. His P.U.E.N.T.E. research lab focuses on bridging the science-to-practice gap by developing collaborative community partnerships to address disparities in mental healthcare.

Diversity Statement: When presenting on issues related to mental health, it is important to include information about various populations including race, class, gender, or sexual orientation, etc., and to include examples of underrepresented groups. This presentation demonstrates a commitment to respecting diversity, including information about various groups and statistics based on research or studies and contributing factors. This training includes information for various gender identities, and also includes information across various ages spans, developmental abilities, and fields.

Course Description: Cultural diversity and the emphasis on evidence-based care have sparked dialogues regarding best practices for engaging communities of color. Given the current climate and disparities in care, we have a responsibility to embody cultural humility when serving clients. As the needs of the healthcare industry, including state- and national-level mandates, require implementing culturally responsive care, this workshop has a central aim in ensuring that providers have the necessary tools to deliver culturally responsive, evidence-based care.

Objectives:

- ❖ Understand and have the ability to identify 5 terms: culture, race/ethnicity, cultural humility, racism, and diversity.
- ❖ Describe 2 major factors impacting disparities in mental healthcare.
- ❖ Identify 5 culturally responsive, evidence-based strategies for addressing mental healthcare disparities.

Who should attend: Open to unlicensed and licensed individuals working in behavioral/mental health related settings including: Agency Supervisors and Managers, Counselors, Direct Care Staff, Educators, Nurses, Social Workers, Support Staff, Students, and Therapists.
